STUDIO INTEGRATE

Mehran Gharleghi and Amin Sadeghy from Studio INTEGRATE have created Flux table within their exploration of fusing the legacy of Islamic art with contemporary modes of computation. The intricate geometry and pattern of the table is derived from a basic Toranj, a mathematical pattern used in Iranian architecture, from which a smooth transition between two layers of strict geometric pattern is constructed. The generated form is manufactured using digital fabrication technologies and the end product is a polyurethane-coated dense foam table.

HEKLA

The Victoria bedside table is created by the multi-disciplinary French design studio Hekla and built by cabinet-maker Julien Ladroue. Inspired by the Australian gold rush of the mid-nineteenth century, Victoria is made from wood veneer in light oak, with a drawer and large open storage compartment offering direct access from the bed. The table features eye-catching details and characterising finishes, such as the gold-effect aluminium coating of the open storage space and the functional and stylish structural design.
